

Kevin Barnes-Ceeney - Bio

Kevin began his career working in homeless shelters in London, before training as an alcohol counselor, and working as an alcohol worker for the Inner London Probation Service. After qualifying as a Probation Officer, he worked for the South Wales Probation Service, managing offenders who were assessed as posing a high risk of harm to the public. Before moving to New York to pursue his Master's degree in criminal justice at John Jay College, he worked as a social work advisor in Astana, Kazakhstan.

He is interested in the way cultural conditions may promote or inhibit the advancement of alternatives to incarceration in developing countries. Kevin is also interested in the construction of risk, and how such constructions may serve to impede successful offender reentry.
